

Listening and Learning

You can practice becoming a careful listener, and learn about someone else at the same time. Interview a friend, classmate, or family member. Take notes or draw pictures to illustrate the answers in the boxes below. After the interview, share your notes or drawings with your partner to find out if you have been a good listener.

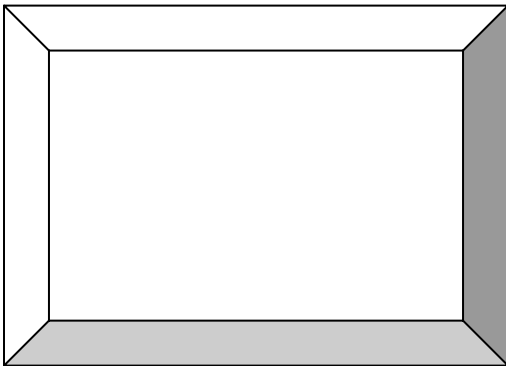

How many brothers and sisters do you have?

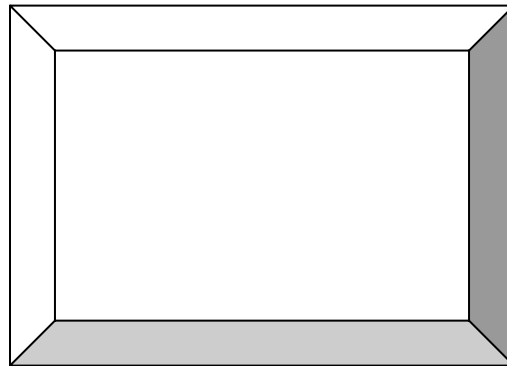

What is your favorite meal?

What is your favorite thing to do?

What is one great thing you would like to do in life?

Family Note: Your child is learning the difference between simply hearing and being a good listener. If your child completes this activity page at home, you might have family members use this same process to interview one another.

Catechist Note: Use this activity page with Chapter 3, "Listening." You may want to conduct a sample interview to demonstrate the process for the class. Encourage the children to use this same listening exercise at home with family members.
